Officials unsure

Metro | Halifax

Health officials are still in the dark as to how long it will take to clear up a backlog of patients awaiting surgery after recent flooding in one hospital resulted in more than 100 cancellations.

Victoria Sullivan, operations executive director with the Nova Scotia Health Authority, said Sunday 91 surgeries were postponed, after parts of the Victoria General building of the Queen Elizabeth II hospital in Halifax flooded.

Sullivan also said more surgeries are expected to be delayed. When asked how long it would take for all surgeries to be complete, Sullivan said, "That's a difficult question to answer. The amount of time will vary."

She said physicians must assess the urgency of each surgery on a patient-by-patient basis, as well as evaluate the building's capacity in order to begin performing day surgeries on Monday.

She added that some of the surgeries have been rescheduled at the Halifax Infirmary while officials are working to return other patients from out of town back to their district hospitals.

"We have had huge support from our home hospitals," she said.

Flooding began after a pipe on the building's fifth floor failed last Thursday around 8 p.m.

'It's bigger than basketball'

COMMUNITY OUTREACH

Team helps low-income children get on the court

Haley Ryan
Metro | Halifax

For Eric Crookshank, being able to look a child in the eye and provide a chance to play basketball is priceless.

Crookshank, a former Halifax Rainmen player, author, and founder of the Bench Bullying movement, is launching a basketball club in Spryfield that welcomes all children — but especially those who don't usually get to play.

"Money shouldn't stop us from helping children. We should do whatever it takes," Crookshank said.

While some families in the Herring Cove area might not have the funds to sign up for a Metro Basketball Association team, Crookshank said he's found programs that can cover the cost for low-income families to join the Bench Bullying teams based at Rockingstone Heights School.

There will be an Under-10 and an Under-12 team for boys this season, Crookshank said, with the goal of adding more ages and girls' teams next year.

"It's bigger than basketball. This is more of helping children," Crookshank said.

"This (is) a way to show kids

After growing up in California as an "at-risk" kid, Crookshank said, he identifies with the children he speaks to at Rockingstone and has watched over the past few years as they grow up and move to J.L. Ilsley High School.

Many students in Spryfield and other areas of HRM are just "waiting for a breakthrough," Crookshank said, which is why he'd like to bring Bench Bullying teams to all parts of the region.

"When I told them, 'I'm starting a club and I want you kids to sign up' ... it was priceless," Crookshank said of his Rockingstone visit.

"One kid said 'Eric, I want to play but I have no money.' For me to look him in his eye and say, 'Buddy, it doesn't matter, just come anyway,' it made him super excited. That really touched me."

Crookshank, who lives in Halifax and is likely headed to the Harlem Globetrotters training camp in November, said the teams will be run and coached by community members since it's important to have parents and residents invested.

Those who play will also have academic progress reports submitted to the team, since Crookshank said that's how it works in university and kids should know how important grades are.

"If they need help, we're going to seek tutelage," he said.

Candidates to battle over student issues

Tuition fees, mental health and youth underemployment are among issues to be discussed during an all-candidates' federal debate on student issues on Monday.

Hosted by the Dalhousie Student Union and the provincial chapter of the Canadian Federation of Students, the event is scheduled to take place at Dal's Student Union Building on Monday from 6:30-8:30 p.m.

All Halifax riding candidates from the NDP, Conservatives, Green and Liberal parties were invited to attend, however, an event page does not name which MP hopefuls will participate. METRO

Police investigate robbery

Halifax Regional Police are investigating a robbery in the south end.

A woman says she entered a building on South Park Street at 3:36 a.m. Saturday when a man grabbed her from behind, threw her down and stole money.

The suspect is described as a Middle Eastern man in his mid-20s with very short black hair, about five-foot-six and 140 pounds. METRO

SHUBIE PARK

Volunteers help pros dig up 1826 home, personal items

Philip Croucher
Metro | Halifax

Along the east side of the canal in Dartmouth's Shubie Park, archeologists and volunteers spent the weekend getting their hands dirty.

For the second year in a row, a public dig took place at the park.

Diggers were excavating what is believed to be a worker's cottage or bunkhouse from between 1826 and 1831.

"(The public dig) not only increases interest, but also increases our sense of having a stake in the past," said archeologist Laura de Boer.

"We're really hoping to increase awareness of the Shubenacadie Canal, which was a massive industrial project that very few people know about."

On Saturday, diggers discovered things such as animal bone, pearlware ceramic and a smoking pipe stem.

"The site is interesting, but not so sensitive that an amateur digger is going to make mistakes or anything," said de Boer. "It's fairly straight forward."

Eri Fujita was one of those amateur diggers. "I thought it was going to be a little bit boring," the 10-year-old admitted. "But we found some cool stuff."

Eri was happy to show off her bag of findings and had few complaints about the challenges of digging.

"What I didn't like was the bugs," she said.

Stuart Glen, a member of the Nova Scotia Archeology Society, was also volunteering his time on Saturday.

"I've always had an interest in archeology," said Glen. "(I like the digging — the search for an artifact."

After a couple of hours in the dirt, he hadn't found very much.

"I have a brick," Glen said with a smile. "But you never know. The next scrape I do might find something more exciting."

The public dig wrapped up on Sunday.

+ VOLUNTEERS

Archeologist Laura De Boer said she hopes public digs will continue taking place, but it depends on volunteers.

WESTVILLE

Chase the Ace players get one last chance

A journey that began as a reconnaissance mission to learn more about community fundraising has turned into a life-changing experience for a Westville pizza shop employee.

Three weeks ago, Carol Hartling travelled to Inverness to take part in the phenomenon that is Chase the Ace.

On Saturday she returned to the mainland with a cheque for $235,132 after her ticket was selected from a box holding more than 700,000 others.

"We wanted to do a Chase the Ace for the town of Westville to raise money possibly for the fire department," said Hartling, who is splitting her winnings with another person.

"Initially, I wanted to go home and go right to the Harley shop and buy a new motorcycle, but that's not happening with this. I think I might have to buy a little house or something because I just rent."

I think I might have to buy a little house or something.

Carol Hartling

Hartling did not pick the Ace of Spades, and thus won the growing jackpot. She would later learn that her hand hovered over the jackpot-winning card before settling on a card that turned out to be the nine of hearts.

That means the jackpot will carry over to next week's grand finale when someone is guaranteed to win a pot that is expected to be worth more than $1.5 million given that next Saturday's ticket sales are similar to the most recent numbers and there is no reason to suggest they will be less. Big Brother hopefuls try their luck

DARTMOUTH

Dozens flood Mic Mac Hall to audition for fourth season

Rebecca Dingwell
For Metro | Halifax

Devin Marks drove all the way from Sydney in Cape Breton to audition for Big Brother Canada on Saturday.

Dozens stood in very long lines with other hopefuls at Mic Mac Mall in Dartmouth to hopefully stand out from the pack.

"I like the concept of the show and pretty much everything about it," Marks said. "So, why not be on it?"

Big Brother Canada began after the success of the American version of the show. It follows a group of contestants — aptly referred to as houseguests — as they live together in a camera-rigged house. During their time on the show, contestants are not allowed to contact anyone outside the house.

Houseguests compete for a grand prize of $100,000, all the while participating in competitions and doing their best not to get "evicted" from the house.

Marks is 19 — the minimum age requirement for competing on the show. He thinks being a long-time Big Brother fan will give him an advantage if he makes the cut for Season 4.

"I've watched all the different types of competitions ... all the different types of gameplay," Marks said. "I've got pretty good confidence going in."

Ashley Dickinson, Big Brother Canada's casting producer, said she hopes the East Coast will be well represented in the upcoming season.

"I think there's something a little gritty, something strong about people from the East Coast," she said.

Dickinson pointed out that Jillian MacLaughlin — a Nova Scotian — won Big Brother Canada's first season.

"We really want people who love the game, who are competitive (and) who wanna showcase their personality here today," Dickinson said.

"People who are really enthusiastic today are going to stand out in my eyes."

Saturday night tilt was the lone pre-season game in Halifax

Kristen Lipscombe
Metro | Halifax

Hardcore New York Islanders fans may have gone home disappointed with Saturday night's result in Halifax, but they were still pumped about getting to see their longtime favourite NHL team play locally.

"I've been a fan since I was about five," said Chris MacLellan, 39, of Dartmouth, who was wearing an old-school Islanders jersey, circa 1992, for the pre-season game at the Scotiabank Centre.

"It's been a long time coming that they have a team that makes the playoffs, so we're pretty excited that they came here."

"Awesome!" eight-year-old son Liam MacLellan added, wearing another one of his dad's old Islanders jerseys, apparently purchased around 1987.

Jeff Skinner scored twice to lead the Carolina Hurricanes to a 5-3 victory over the Islanders in Halifax's lone pre-season NHL game this year.

Although there was plenty of Islanders apparel out at the rink, the occasional Hurricanes jersey was also spotted, along with other random NHL gear worn by fans, ranging from the Boston Bruins and Colorado

It's not too often, after all, that the NHL comes to town.

Caroline Kuepers bought her boyfriend, Chad Jones, tickets to the exhibition NHL game for his birthday last month because he's a longtime Carolina fan, and had yet to see his favourite team play live.

"Especially for me, I thought I might be the only 'Canes fan in Nova Scotia," Jones said, adding he saw a few others kicking around the rink Saturday. "I was a Hartford Whalers fan as a kid, and they moved to Carolina, so I always stuck with them."

The Halifax couple, who were "just hoping for the win," got exactly what they wanted from their NHL experience Saturday night.

The total attendance of Saturday's game was 4,641, which was actually less than the typical crowd seen at Halifax Mooseheads games during QMJHL action.

Lottery ticket worth $1M sold in Sydney

Someone in Nova Scotia should have one million reasons to smile Saturday. One of the Maxmillion prizes from Friday night were awarded to a ticket that was bought in Sydney. The numbers drawn were: 04-15-23-26-34-45-46. There were a total of 12 Maxmillion prizes of $1 million each won during Friday night's draw. One ticket in Ontario matched all seven numbers to win the $60 million Lotto Max prize. The $1-million lotto win is the second winning ticket sold in Nova Scotia in the past week. A Lotto 6/49 ticket worth $1 million was sold in Halifax for the Sept. 19 draw. CAPE BRETON POST, WITH FILES FROM METRO HALIFAX

Freight rail relaunch would be costly: Studies

Relaunching a freight rail service in Cape Breton would be a challenging prospect and require more than the $31.4 million estimated for rail line improvements over five years. That's the conclusion of three government-sanctioned studies released today that looked at future economic opportunities, the condition of the line and the costs of shipping goods by rail as opposed to trucks. Current owner Genesee and Wyoming withdrew service last December, but can't apply for abandonment and the potential removal of the rails until April 2016 under a law passed by the province last fall. Teen hurt after slipping off hood of moving car

RCMP in Nova Scotia are investigating after reports a teenager riding on the hood of a car slipped and hit his head on the pavement.

Just after 6:30 p.m. Wednesday, Kings District RCMP responded to a serious injury in the parking lot of a Canadian Tire store in Greenwood.

Police said they believe the 16-year-old boy was sitting on the hood of a slow-moving car being driven by a 16-year-old

The boy was taken to hospital, and RCMP said the investigation is ongoing. METRO

Man exposes himself at bus stop, police say

Halifax police are exploring the possibility that an indecent act reported last week could be connected to several others earlier this month.

Police say on Wednesday at about 10 p.m. on Inglis Street near Tower Road, a man approached a woman waiting for the bus, exposed himself and then touched her.

As the man was touching the woman, the bus arrived, and she got on.

The man ran away.

The suspect is described as a thin, clean-shaven bald white man in his 40s in a "greyish-green" tracksuit.

Police say they're looking at whether this incident might be connected to other incidents that occurred on Sept. 1 and Sept. 10.

READY TO ENGAGE

Metro's coast to coast daily election series connects young, urban Canadians to the issues they care about

'I trust none of them' — except Green party leader

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD
in Edmonton

It's all about one federal leader for Anna Rushdy.

"I feel like I'm pretty good at reading whether someone's being honest. I trust none of them, with the exception of Elizabeth May."

To the 27-year-old Edmontonian, every other federal party leader is a slave to partisan politics. And May is the antidote.

So, on Oct. 19, Rushdy will vote Green.

"Partisan politics actually does nothing, especially for me — and when I say for me, I mean poor people."

"We already know Harper doesn't care about poor people, but I'd be hard-pressed to believe that the other two do."

The Liberals' Justin Trudeau, in particular, earned Rushdy's ire through his glad-handing presence at Pride events in the city, politicking at a time when Rushdy says the LGBTQ community, and its oppression, should be in the spotlight.

They (Rushdy is gender-non-conforming and rejects he/she pronouns) sit in the basement café of an old brick building in Edmonton, the site of a former job, before they landed a slightly better low-paying job at a bakery.

After graduating in 2011 with a degree in education with a specialization in special-needs care, Rushdy hasn't been able to find related work. Deferring student loans has helped, but it doesn't make them disappear.

Rushdy's been to the polls twice before: Once to vote Green, and once to spoil the ballot — drawing happy faces beside each candidate. It was only after hearing Elizabeth May promise to make post-secondary education free and forgive student debt above $10,000, that Rushdy decided to pick a candidate this time.

"Those are things that actually affect my quality of life. It's very anti-classist, and I love that."

Planning to vote Green in a riding pollsters are predicting is a tight NDP/Liberal race doesn't worry Rushdy.

"If you're constantly telling people, 'If you vote a certain way, you're throwing away your vote' — no one will ever vote that way."

That kind of language only underlines the status quo, Rushdy said.

"If we truly believe in democracy and that's how we have our voices heard, we need to vote for who we think is best, and not because all your friends are voting NDP, and it's hip and fashionable."

Rushdy believes change is possible: "We never thought we would see a non-Conservative Alberta."

As the election approaches, Rushdy senses a chance to shift political discourse.

"I think my needs are most met not even just by what the party platform is, but by anti-partisan politics."

"Because what it is, is a discussion between people not against people."

Plus: "I'm looking forward to a Harper-free Canada."

MUNICIPAL VS. FEDERAL

Most politicians miss the basic issues people care about

Ryan Tumilty
Metro | Edmonton

Chris Henderson has run three highly successful municipal campaigns. His most recent gave Edmonton's 36-year-old mayor, Don Iveson, a resounding win in 2013.

Henderson, 33, took leave from his full-time job in marketing to work 20-hour days for months to help Iveson get elected, but he's decidedly less interested in the federal election.

"I would let my children watch violent television before I would let them watch a leaders' debate," he said.

Henderson said the partisanship and acrimonious debates in federal politics are turning young people off and keeping them out of the process.

He said that Iveson's campaign was able to attract hundreds of young volunteers in large part because no one cared what someone had done before or what party they belonged to. "It was just whoever was interested in working," he said.

"There was no ideological behaviour involved."

On top of that, he said, federal politicians are missing the basics people care about — issues like good roads, affordable housing and reliable transit.

"Municipal services are the things that actually matter to people."

Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi agrees there is far too much "mindless partisanship" in federal politics and he believes Canadians feel the same way.

"I don't identify with the left or the right or the Conservative or the Liberal and I think very few Canadians actually do," he said. "They identify with pragmatic things that will make their community better."

Nenshi said party politics forces leaders to focus on matters essential to their base, but meaningless to most Canadians.

"The current debate around the niqab at citizenship ceremonies is a really good example of that," he said. "It matters to no one."

Iveson said the young people he talks to are engaged, but in local issues, like housing and transit, or global ones like climate change and the refugee crisis.

"Federal politics in particular is pretty abstract when you're dealing with your post-secondary issues, or your transportation issues or your housing issues," he said.

Iveson said there are battleground ridings that could swing if federal politicians were talking about how to make buying a house or getting to work easier.

"Federal leaders who can speak with authenticity on those issues will find themselves all of a sudden relevant to that potentially deciding vote."

THE MAYORS

Young superstars

Much of the energy and enthusiasm emanating from politically active young Canadians is being directed not at the House of Commons or provincial legislatures but at city halls, particularly in the West.

Gilbert Ngabo

Naheed Nenshi: He was only 38 when he won the Calgary mayoral race in 2010, and the first Muslim mayor of a large North American city. A Harvard graduate, nonprofit management professor and business adviser to corporate leaders, his popularity has grown over the years in office. He's a strong advocate of making cities work better.

Don Iveson: He's serving his first term as mayor of Edmonton, a job he assumed in 2013 when he was only 34. His strong asset is community organizing. From his experience running the university newspaper to serving as president of Canadian University Press and advocacy director of the University of Alberta Student Union, he's always seemed destined for politics. He's also a strong advocate of the LGBTQ community.

Gregor Robertson: He was 44 when, in 2008, he won the race to become mayor of Vancouver. Now serving his third term, Robertson was an active member of the NDP of British Columbia until he resigned to run for mayor. Public transit and ending homelessness are two of his top priorities.

Quebec to fix 11 racist site names

Eleven Quebec sites whose names contain words with pejorative or racist connotations will be renamed, a provincial commission announced Friday.

In a news release, the commission announced it had “de-officialized” the place names, all of which contain the word “n—” or the French word “negre.”

“Some of these place names, over time, testify to historical events,” the statement read. “However, even if the words ‘n—’ and ‘negro’ are of ancient usage, they can violate the dignity of the members of the black community.”

Rachel Zellars, a McGill University PhD candidate who studies the history of slavery and of black Canadians, started a petition in early August after hearing a media report that included the statement that no official complaints had been lodged against the names.

ELECTION 2015

NDP, Tories keep focus on homegrown issues

All three main federal parties concentrated on homegrown, hot-button issues and largely kept their foreign policy powder dry ahead of the next leaders’ debate.

New Democrats put themselves squarely in the spotlight with Tom Mulcair outlining, in broad strokes, the party’s plan to address climate change. But in a half-hour long question-and-answer session with party members and the media, he forcefully reiterated his case to repeal two signature pieces of the Harper government’s security and anti-terror agenda.

Not to be outdone, the Conservatives rolled out two cabinet ministers to take shots at the Liberals over Justin Trudeau’s suggestion his party would scrap some aspects of the mandatory minimum sentencing law, another marquee piece of legislation for a government that paints itself as tough on crime.

Tony Clement and Julian Fantino, speaking in Vaughan, Ont., also went after Trudeau for interview comments earlier in the weekend where he was quoted as saying deficits are a way of measuring economic growth and success of a government.

Both ministers, additionally, piled on the $146 billion costing of the Liberal platform, released Saturday in Ottawa, saying it would “destabilize” the economy.

Trudeau and Conservative Leader Stephen Harper were both off the campaign trail in anticipation of Monday’s foreign policy debate.

Mulcair, in Toronto to talk climate change, gave a taste of how acrimonious the exchange could get by accusing the Conservatives of holding back until the middle of the election campaign on the plan to strip the citizenship of the convicted Toronto 18 terror ringleader.

Missing tributes shock brother

A brother of one of the women murdered by Robert Pickton says he’s shocked and upset after the City of Vancouver removed plaques honouring three of the killer’s victims.

Bronze plaques bearing the names of Georgina Papin, Brenda Wolfe and Marnie Frey were installed in a sidewalk in the city’s Downtown Eastside in 2012.

George Papin said he treasured the memorial “as it was a part of me, just like my sister,” he said. “And now they take this away.”

The memorials were part of an unfinished project called The Living Stones, which was originally set to lay 62 plaques at the last known locations of missing and murdered women.

The city took over the project in 2013 after the non-profit group that launched it dissolved. A city spokesman said staff had been working to “resolve issues” around the project. THE CANADIAN PRESS

A 'moral outrage'

DEVELOPMENT

Obama pledges U.S. support to new UN anti-poverty strategy

President Barack Obama on Sunday committed the U.S. to a new blueprint to eliminate poverty and hunger around the world, telling a global summit that a sweeping new development agenda is "not charity but instead is one of the smartest investments we can make in our own future."

It was the first of two addresses Obama is making at the United Nations. His second, to the annual UN General Assembly of world leaders and expected Monday, will be a broader examination of world issues, especially the escalating conflict in Syria and the related refugee crisis.

As Secretary of State John Kerry said after a meeting Sunday, "It would be a complete understatement to say that we meet at a challenging time."

Obama offered a powerful defence of a 15-year development agenda that will require trillions of dollars of effort from countries, companies and civil society.

He told delegates 800 million men, women and children scrape by on less than $1.25 a day and billions of people are at risk of dying from preventable diseases.

He called it a "moral outrage" that many children are just one mosquito bite away from death.

Obama said the goals are ambitious but can be achieved if governments work together.

And, with a possible nod toward his address on Monday, he noted "military interventions might have been avoided over the years" if countries had spent more time, money and effort on caring for their own people.

"Development is threatened by war," Obama said, and war often arises from bad governance. Addressing the world's greatest refugee crisis since the Second World War as millions flee conflict in Syria and elsewhere, he said countries "that can, must do more to accommodate refugees" but added those efforts "must be matched by hard work of diplomacy."

PAPAL VISIT

Pontiff takes part in massive Mass

Pope Francis joined hundreds of thousands of the faithful Sunday for the last and biggest event of his joyful, six-day U.S. visit — a Mass on Philadelphia's grandest boulevard — after meeting with victims of the church sex abuse scandal and offering words of hope to jail inmates.

Riding through the streets in his open-sided popemobile, the pontiff waved to cheering, screaming, singing, flag-waving crowds as he made his way up the Benjamin Franklin Parkway and reached the altar at the foot of the broad steps of the Philadelphia Museum of Art. It was the final stop on his itinerary before he was to return to Rome.

Organizers predicted a crowd of one million, though there were fears unprecedented security — including airport-style bag searches, crowd-control cattle chutes and blocked streets — had scared many people away.

Prior to the Mass, Francis met with victims of child sexual abuse and told them he is "deeply sorry" for the times they told their story and weren't believed. He assured them he believes them and bishops will be held to account for what they did.

We will follow the path of truth wherever it may lead.

Pope Francis

"I pledge to you that we will follow the path of truth wherever it may lead," Francis said in Spanish.

Then, he went into a meeting with American bishops in town for a Catholic festival on the family and told them the same thing face-to-face.

"God weeps" over what was done to the youngsters, he said.

Also Sunday, Francis visited a Philadelphia jail to give hope of redemption to about 100 inmates.

"May you make possible new opportunities, new journeys, new paths," he said, standing before a wooden chair the men had made for him for the occasion.

The blue-uniformed inmates, some of them heavily tattooed, seemed moved. They clasped Francis' hands, and two gave him a hug. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

EUROPE

Concessions made for refugees

Co-operation replaced confrontation this past weekend among European nations as thousands of asylum-seekers streamed into Croatia in hopes of creating a new future in Western Europe.

Despite steps that should eventually ease the chaos, the sheer number of people flooding into Croatia strained the resources of one of the European Union's poorest nations.

At least 10,000 arrived on Friday alone, and Croatian authorities struggled to keep up with the influx of those fleeing war and poverty in the Middle East, Africa and Asia.

Still, a new co-operative mode began emerging among the nations in southeast Europe. Hungary announced it had removed spools of razor wire from a section of its border with Slovenia, a barrier that breached EU rules about unrestricted travel within much of its territory. The gesture followed the reopening of the main border point between Croatia and Serbia.

The concessions, coming two days after an EU summit on the migrant crisis, suggested the bloc had become alarmed at the lack of co-operation among its members and the increasingly ugly tone of their exchanges. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIDDLE EAST

Countries will pool intelligence

Iraq's military said Sunday it will begin sharing "security and intelligence" information with Syria, Russia and Iran to help combat the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL), a move that could further complicate U.S. efforts to battle the extremists without working with Damascus and its allies.

Iraq has long had close ties with neighbouring Iran and the nations have been working together to combat ISIL, which controls about a third of Iraq and Syria in a self-declared caliphate.

A U.S.-led coalition has also been conducting airstrikes against ISIL in Iraq and Syria while training and advising Iraqi forces, but U.S. officials insist the efforts have not been co-ordinated with Iran.

The U.S. also refuses to co-operate with Syrian President Bashar Assad, who Washington has insisted should step down. Russia and Iran have provided crucial support to Assad since Syria's uprising began in 2011.

The Baghdad-based spokesman for the U.S.-led campaign against the ISIL group, Col. Steve Warren, said the U.S. remains committed to working with Iraq to defeat the extremists.

"We recognize that Iraq has an interest in sharing information on ISIL with other governments in the region who are also fighting ISIL," Warren said. "We do not support the presence of Syrian government officials who are part of a regime that has brutalized its own citizens."

PRAIRIE DOGS

Relocation 'better than letting somebody shoot it'

Most mornings, wildlife biologist Jessica Van Woeart and her team go to work armed with peanut butter.

In subdivisions and across rural pastures in southern Utah, they use it to help trap prairie dogs to move them away from residents who have been besieged by the small burrowing rodents for years.

The Utah prairie dog is the smallest of five species and lives in underground colonies in the southern part of the state. Considered key to the ecosystem, their numbers dropped precipitously as land was cleared to make way for people. They were listed as endangered in 1973.

With federal protection, the population rebounded to about 28,000 as of this spring, according to state tallies, and they were upgraded to threatened.

But the animals weren't rare to locals.

"They're really cute little things, but they really cause so much damage," said Sharon Peterson, a Cedar City resident.

In 2013, a group of residents sued in federal court. After U.S. District Judge Dee Benson's ruling, the ranks of prairie dogs near Peterson's house thinned under a new trapping program.

Van Woeart heads that program up. Some days, they catch more than 100 prairie dogs. After they're caught, the creatures are weighed, tagged and then loaded into a pickup truck for an hour-long drive to a new home.

Their new homes are prepared ahead of time: A system of artificial burrows made from irrigation piping and plastic boxes and buried underground.

The workers leave food and water and try to keep the highly social animals together, but many of them don't survive transition.

"When you pick an animal up out of its natural setting and you move it to a new location ... you can expect a fairly high mortality rate," Keith Day, a state biologist who oversees the program, said.

Still, he said trapping an animal and moving it is better than the lethal methods that fed-up locals used to employ.

"If we can put a prairie dog out on federal land and get a colony out of it, that's better than letting somebody shoot it," Day said.

Secessionists jubilant

CATALONIA

Victory in Spanish vote could lead to breakoff nation

Pro-secession parties pushing for Spain's northeastern Catalonia region to break away and form a new Mediterranean nation won a landmark vote Sunday by capturing a majority of seats in the region's parliament, setting up a possible showdown over independence with the central government in Madrid.

With 97 per cent of the vote counted, the "Together for Yes" group of secessionists had 62 seats in the 135-member parliament. If they join forces with the left-wing pro-independence Popular Unity Candidacy party, which won 10 seats, they will have the 68 seats needed to push forward their plan to make Catalonia independent from Spain by 2017.

But CUP had insisted that it would only join an independence bid if secessionist parties won more than 50 per cent of the popular vote. They won only about 46 per cent because of a quirk in Spanish election law that gives a higher proportion of legislative seats to rural areas with fewer voters.

Still, Catalonia leader Artur Mas claimed victory as a jubilant crowd interrupted him with cheers and chants of "Independence!"

Many Catalans who favour breaking away from Spain say their industrialized region, which represents nearly a fifth of Spain's economic output, pays too much in taxes and receives less than its fair share of government investment.

"As democrats we were prepared to accept the defeat.

Now, we demand that they accept the victory for Catalonia and the victory of the 'yes,'" said Mas. "We have a lot of work ahead, we won't let you down, we know we have the democratic mandate. We have won and that gives us an enormous strength to push this project forward."

SYRIA

France launches first airstrikes against ISIL

Six French jet fighters targeted and destroyed an Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) training camp in eastern Syria in a five-hour operation on Sunday, President Francois Hollande announced, making good on a promise to go after the group that he has said is planning attacks against several countries, including France.

The multiple airstrikes were the first in Syria by France as it expands its mission against ISIL, until now centred in Iraq.

"The camp was totally destroyed," Hollande said Sunday after arriving at the United Nations, before the start of a major development summit and the U.N. General Assembly bringing together world leaders.

"We're sure there were no casualties" among civilians, he added.

The French president's office announced the strikes, without details, in a statement hours earlier.

"Our nation will strike each time our national security is at stake," the statement said.

Hollande told reporters the strikes on the training camp, and others to come, were aimed at "protecting our territory, cutting short terrorist actions, acting in legitimate defence."

However, the strikes will likely have but a limited effect. The U.S.-led coalition has been carrying out regular airstrikes that punish but have failed to decimate ISIL, which controls large swaths of Syria.

Hollande's decision to carry out targeted strikes on strategic ISIL sites is coupled with France's bid to press for a political solution to the Syrian crisis. Beyond military objectives, the strikes serve to bolster France's position in helping to find a solution to a crisis that also includes Russia and Iran.

New phone to address issue of lack of apps, CEO says

With its hardware sales still flagging BlackBerry's chief executive John Chen says he's found a different way to sell his devices. For the first time in BlackBerry's history, the company is going to sell a smartphone that runs on somebody else's programming rather than its own in-house creation.

BlackBerry will release the Priv phone later this year, which uses Google's Android operating system. The switch was a controversial decision at BlackBerry, Chen told reporters Friday at the company's Waterloo, Ont. headquarters, but it addresses one of the biggest marketing problems BlackBerry faced: Its phones are missing some of the most popular apps and games used by most customers and even businesses.

"I am now going to eliminate apps as an excuse not to buy our phone," Chen said. "We'll see how it goes."

BlackBerry's lack of apps has been a thorn in its side. Handfuls of popular apps, from dating service Tinder to Candy Crush, were unavailable for years.

Chen tried to eliminate that problem last fall in a partnership with the Amazon Appstore, which offers thousands of apps built for the Android operating system.

His hope was that Amazon's store would see its app selection multiply quickly after the launch of the Amazon Fire phone last year. But when sales of Amazon's first device failed to ignite, it left

Chen in a partnership that wasn't quite as ideal as he'd hoped — many apps, like Netflix and Snapchat, were still missing from the mix — and BlackBerry sales suggested that customers weren't swayed by the proposition.

BlackBerry hopes the Priv will give it another swing at making a smartphone that competes with the best.

Forgive me, Francis, but I was hoping for better from you

Michael Coren
For Metro

He came, he spoke, he went. Pope Francis visited the United States for the first time, delivered a speech to congress and the United Nations and met with the country's Catholic and non-Catholic leaders alike. The man has a human touch, a generosity of spirit and a progressive persona that gives hope and differentiates him from his predecessor. But in all honesty, the visit will change very little.

I realize this is not what the public wants to hear, but passing emotionalism is simply not enough. The same occurred when Pope John Paul visited Canada for World Youth Day in 2002 — massive enthusiasm for a few days and then a severe case of back-to-business-as-usual.

In his speeches, Francis spoke lyrically of the Golden Rule, of love, humanity and our communal existence. He also touched briefly and implicitly on his condemnation of abortion and same-sex marriage but was far more precise in dealing with climate change, immigration and the need for peace and gave specific attention to the plight of the poor. It was compelling stuff.

But the reality of the situation is that the modern Catholic Church is polarized and top-heavy. The leadership rejects contraception, gay rights, abortion and female ordination, even while the vast majority of western Catholics disagree. Indeed, these papal positions are considered so morally anachronistic today in North America and Europe that it prevents Catholicism from preaching the gospel or being taken seriously. Young people in particular reject any institution or ideology that in their eyes rejects gender and sexual equality.

Then there was what Francis did not say. While he referred to the sexual-abuse crisis in the United States and met with some of its victims, he didn't admit to its systemic nature and ignored the fact that the church had denied and obfuscated until the media made acknowledgement unavoidable.

Francis is the Pope of paradox. While he is certainly concerned for the marginalized, his church refuses to sanction condom use even in countries with staggeringly high levels of HIV/AIDS. He cares for the disabled but leads an institution that fights embryonic stem-cell research that could lead to countless medical cures. He embraces the poor, but the wealth of the Vatican is beyond counting.

Nobody would deny that the Roman Catholic message is now being delivered in far more empathetic tones than in the past, but it is substance rather than delivery that matters. Forgive me, Father, but I am still waiting.

Public-service contract should mean what it says

HALIFAX MATTERS

Stephen Kimber

I like Bernie Miller, and I think Premier Stephen McNeil is lucky to have the currently on-leave managing partner at law firm McInnes Cooper as one of his government's key political advisors.

We should question Stephen McNeil's cavalier, condescending attitude to legitimate questions about Miller's contract.

Having said that, I also think, as a matter of public policy, we need to ask serious questions about McNeil's deal with Bernard F. Miller Services P.C., Inc., the company that provides the services of its sole employee — one Bernie Miller — to the government.

And beyond that, we should question Stephen McNeil's cavalier, condescending attitude to legitimate questions about Miller's contract. The major concern raised is that this type of employment arrangement may allow someone to pay less income tax.

Let's start with the contract. Miller is a de facto government employee. He doesn't have another job. He works full-time — probably more — as deputy minister. His office, office services, computer, cellphone, work-related expenses and more are covered by the government.

The contract says he's entitled to standard employee benefits, even if the premier and Miller insist he has chosen not to take them. (If that's the case, government lawyers should have struck the clause from the contract.)

McNeil claims the government saves money because it's not paying benefits and wouldn't pay severance if Miller leaves early (another provision that, mysteriously, isn't in his actual contract).

But it isn't clear whether, in negotiating Miller's $180,000 compensation package, anyone fluffed up the total to reflect the fact he'd fund his own health and other benefits. Or, conversely, if anyone took into account the disconnect between the three-per-cent corporate tax Miller Services would pay, versus the 21 per cent Bernie Miller, as an individual taxpayer, would fork over to the treasury.

McNeil's ludicrous suggestion that he'd welcome other public servants choosing to work under such contracts shows how little he understands where his government's revenues come from — and how little he respects salaried public servants.

McNeil began by suggesting the contract included provisions — no benefits, no severance — it didn't, then argued the contract's words didn't matter. Finally, he fell into the last defence of the otherwise defenceless: blaming those who asked legitimate questions for scaring public-minded citizens like Miller from public service.

If that's all it takes to scare them off, we'd be better off without them.

Kids' books tackle tough topics

BOOKS

Stories help parents with talks about sex and death

Megan Haynes
For Metro Canada

How young is too young to learn about sex? Disease? Death?

"As parents, we want our kids to learn everything," says Cory Silverberg, author and sex educator. "We get so excited when they learn a new word, how to walk. But even in the most open of households, sex is a topic that gets treated a bit differently. It's the same for death, violence and war. And that's confusing to kids."

Books, he says, can help parents have those difficult conversations.

Sex is a Funny Word
Silverberg started writing Sex is a Funny Word (Seven Stories, $23.95, out now) more than two years ago — well ahead of the deluge of news around the current Ontario curriculum, issues of consent, and transgender rights. And with all these topics in the news, the timing of its release couldn't be better.

Sex is a Funny Word is a trans-positive and feminist-leaning sex education guide for kids eight to 10 that tackles consent, gender and masturbation (and more). It was written and illustrated to be as inclusive as possible, he says. Phrases like "could feel" and "is an example of" are meant to help kids realize that just because they don't feel a certain way, have a certain body part or do a certain thing, it doesn't mean something is wrong with them.

Bug in a Vacuum examines the five stages of grief, even though it doesn't explicitly talk about death. CONTRIBUTED/MELANIE WATT

"When you say 'having your mom brush your hair is an example of feeling good in your body,' well what happens if that person doesn't have a mom?" he says. "That's a little moment that kid (thinks) 'Oh, this book doesn't reflect me.'"

And while inclusivity is a primary goal of the book, the main purpose is to define words kids might hear but not understand and facilitate discussion, he says.

"'Sexy' is a great example," he says. "I say 'some people think sexy is this' (in one chapter) and that gives parents an opportunity to say 'In our family, sexy is something else.'"

Bug in a Vacuum
Opening a discussion was a key goal for Melanie Watt's Bug in a Vacuum, (Tundra Books, $24.99, out now), which follows a fly sucked into a vacuum as it (and its wiener-dog friend on the outside) go through the five stages of grief, she says.

The book, for kids five to nine, isn't explicitly about death, but there are overtones towards the topic (the bug deals with the realization that it might never escape the vacuum, while the dog deals with the loss of its friend).

"The two characters both struggle with a problem. They react in similar ways, but for totally different reasons," she says. "I think that's a nice metaphor to life: Everyone can go through a difficult moment, and it's OK, because you're not alone."

Today is the Day
Of course, being alone is a relative concept. Eric Walters' Today is the Day, (Tundra Books, $19.99, out Oct. 13, 2015) helps kids tackle what happens to youth in nations with high mortality rates. Set in Kenya, the story, for kids five to nine, follows a young girl celebrating her birthday alongside the rest of the orphanage. All the kids celebrate on the same day, as most don't have records of when they were born. The epilogue explains many children in the region grow up without parents due to HIV/AIDS, but they too have value and are deserving of birthdays.

"Books are a tool that can help make very difficult conversations a little easier," adds Silverberg. It isn't that kids don't understand these big concepts like war, death, disease, sex, or gender issues, he says.

"Often these conversations don't go well because of a lack of language.

"Kids are smart — they understand the world around them — they just want the right words."

OSCAR HOPEFUL

Foreign language pick: Felix et Meira

Maxime Giroux's Felix et Meira has been selected as Canada's Oscar hopeful in the best foreign-language film category.

It stars Martin Dubreuil and Hadas Yaron and deals with the unusual romance between a married Orthodox Jewish woman and a young man mourning his father's death in Montreal's Mile End neighbourhood.

Telefilm Canada made it official at a Montreal news conference on Friday in the presence of its elated director.

"It's difficult for me to say in English, but I guess 'wow' in English is OK?" Giroux said laughing. "It's a Montreal film — it's in French, in English, in Yiddish," he added. "I'm really happy that I'm here to represent Canada and also Montreal."

Co-producer Sylvain Corbeil noted the film was made on a budget of about $800,000 and was shot in Venice and New York City among other locations.

"We had to be really inventive to make it realistic and good," said Corbeil.

Writing the script was difficult because it was not easy to research the closed community. Corbeil also hailed the actors — many of them came from Hasidic backgrounds and had left the community.

"Through our research for this film, we discovered it was a very, very huge step to make because once you leave the community, you're an outcast in your family, in your community," Corbeil said. "For them to have this courage was a great source of inspiration for us."

Del Toro returns to dark side in drug cartel film

SICARIO

There's talk that role could earn actor an Oscar nod

Sicario, opening Friday, puts actor Benicio Del Toro in the same U.S.-Mexico drug war milieu as Traffic, the 2000 Steven Soderbergh film that won Del Toro the Academy Award for Best Supporting Actor. There's serious talk of another Oscar for him. His predatory character Alejandro in Sicario, a Mexican operative involved in an FBI and DEA sting on an entrenched and violent drug cartel, is decidedly more threatening than the conflicted cop Del Toro played in Traffic. But he similarly radiates a sense of righteousness out of the gloom, which he was happy to discuss.

Sicario starring Benicio Del Toro opens Friday. TOMMASO BODDI/GETTY IMAGES

You play dark characters so well. Are you happy to do so?

When I first started acting, the characters that turned me on were characters by actors that I looked up to, guys like Robert De Niro and Al Pacino, and later Sean Penn and Mickey Rourke.... There's something about the characters who are conflicted where you can perhaps play different notes or go against it and find stuff that you never thought you would. But I think doing a character that is dark or doing a character that is light is equally as complicated. One thing about this character (Alejandro) was to make sure that less is more.

You aren't from Mexico, but you've often played Mexican characters. You convey understanding and empathy for the country.

I've been to Mexico many times. It's a country that I admire, its history and culture. It's one of my favourite countries to visit. In order to do this film, I talked to DEA friends of mine who are involved or have been involved in this world to get information about that because I don't know much about this problem in Mexico with the violence.

The drug-cartel violence in Sicario seems all too frighteningly real, threatening to overwhelm legal authorities and society itself. Does it seem this bleak to you in real life?

It's really scary. Ruben Blades, a singer-songwriter and actor from Panama, has talked about the situation, how it's gotten out of hand and how it's no longer a problem just for Mexico. It's a problem for other Latin American countries, the United States, Canada, the world.

Frances Bean Cobain reportedly married without telling mom

They grow up so fast. Frances Bean Cobain, 23, the daughter of Kurt Cobain and Courtney Love, reportedly went off and married boyfriend Isaiah Silva in a super-secret ceremony, according to E! News.

How super-secret are we talking? Not even Love knew about it. Ouch.

"Courtney loves Isaiah but was devastated to learn that Frances had gotten married without her knowing," a source says.

"Courtney really likes Isaiah and is very happy for Frances. Courtney is sad she wasn't at the wedding. Frances called her after but understands why she did it. Frances needs a man in her life and has always craved stability. She's found it in Isaiah. This has not caused a rift between mom and daughter. Courtney was sad, but she's cool and Isaiah is a great son-in-law." A great son-in-law who dresses eerily similar to his new bride's dead dad, I think it's worth pointing out.

Wahlberg jokes with pope

Within an hour of the start of a festival headlined by Pope Francis, Mark Wahlberg already had made a joke about his raunchy movie Ted.

The actor was the master of ceremonies Saturday night while Francis sat on stage to hear from families and musical performances at the World Meeting of Families event.

Fourteen-year-old Bobby Hill of the Keystone State Boychoir performed an opera solo and told Wahlberg that he liked his performance in the movie about an angry talking teddy bear. Wahlberg joked that he told the boy the movie wasn't appropriate for someone his age, and he asked the pope for forgiveness. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WORK-LIFE

Some thrive on pressure, others need downtime

Eleni Deacon
For Metro Canada

Schedule breaks. Prioritize. Turn off your phone after 6 p.m. Exercise during your lunch hour. Make sure you actually take your lunch hour. Make sure you actually eat during your lunch hour. Meditate for six minutes every morning before sunrise. Know when to stop.

Work-life balance is the white whale of the white-collar world. Employees want it — but it's often too slippery to pin down.

Which is why Amazon became the target of criticism last month when The New York Times published a fascinating — and highly disparaging — investigation into their take-no-prisoners corporate culture.

Former staffers described the organization's combative atmosphere and punishing workloads, as well as the many personal sacrifices necessary to uphold the company's aggressive demands.

When discussing work-life balance, there's a prefab idea of what it means.

Compared to other tech giants like Netflix and Google — which famously offer perks like unlimited vacation and time to work on your own projects — Amazon comes off as stingy and cold.

Despite disturbing anecdotes about Amazon's institutionalized backstabbing and failure to support ailing employees during serious life crises, some of the article's sources found the company's breakneck pace exhilarating.

When discussing work-life balance, there's a prefab idea of what it means: work hard 9 to 5, chill hard when you're not at work.

So while the Amazon exposé illuminates the company's failure to uphold this vision, the happy employees suggest a different model altogether.

Their inner scales are not calibrated according to an even distribution of life and work. For them, intensity brings harmony.

The myth of balance

Work-life balance is slippery to pin down. People might benefit from figuring out if their workloads match their career ambitions. ISTOCK

Amazon puts exceptional pressure on its staff — but it's by no means the only company expecting around-the-clock availability from its workers.

With after-hours communication now the norm, the Amazon story represents the most extreme end of a widespread trend.

The work-life-balance ideal sounds nice.

However, with so many employees falling short of its promise, it may sometimes be more of an unattainable disappointment than an encouraging goal.

Rather than comparing their current stresses to dreams of unplugged weekends and early-morning yoga, employees might benefit from understanding whether their current workload is an appropriate match for their career ambitions and personal stamina.

They may find that their version of balance changes significantly according to career stage, life stage and enthusiasm for their present role.

Working until you're unhappy or burnt out can have dangerous consequences.

But having a healthy understanding of the factors that contribute to your personal work-life equilibrium can help determine whether you're the type of employee who thrives under Amazon-ian tension — or the type who prefers using Amazon to download ebooks for the weekend.

Robot owners warned off droid sex

The company behind a chatty Japanese humanoid named Pepper has felt the need to remind customers who purchase the robots not to engage in sex with them.

Mobile phone giant SoftBank, which sells the units in Japan, states helpfully in its user agreement: "The policy owner must not perform any sexual act or other indecent behaviour."

The wise-cracking Pepper — who, according to its makers, can read people's emotions — costs a cool $1,600.

The ban on sex with the plastic machine — which stands just 1.2 metres (3.9 feet) and moves on rollers — is the most baffling of the prohibited uses baffling, causing social media in Japan to light up in amazement. SoftBank said lewd acts could trigger punitive action.

Mooseheads fall 3-2 to provincial rival Cape Breton

Kristen Lipscombe
Metro | Halifax

The Halifax Mooseheads have lost the first instalment of this season's Battle of Nova Scotia.

The Cape Breton Screaming Eagles edged out their provincial rivals 3-2 in overtime Sunday afternoon, despite the Herd playing one of their tighter, stronger games of the year in front of a loud and proud crowd of 6,010 green- and red-clad fans at the Scotiabank Centre.

Defenceman Loïc Léveillé notched the game-winner with just 35 seconds left in the extra frame, which played out using the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League's new five minutes of three-on-three format.

"You have to be on your toes at all times, and there's a lot of space out there," 18-year-old goaltender Kevin Resop said of the new overtime structure he experienced first-hand between the Halifax posts.

"Anything can happen," the second-year player from St. Petersburg, Fla., said. "It could have gone either way."

The matchup marked Resop's second start of the regular season. Despite the loss he earned third-star honours, making an impressive 31 saves to help keep the Herd in it.

Mooseheads rookie forward Barrett Dachyshyn said he enjoyed the excitement of the three-on-three action, despite a disappointing outcome for his team.

Forward Clark Bishop scored in the first, while Maxim Lazarev tied it up again in the middle frame for the Screaming Eagles.

But a wrist shot from Halifax forward Maxime Fortier got the goal scoring started on a power play at 4:42 in the opening frame, while defenceman Jean-Sébastien Taillefer found the back of the net on a point shot, for his first goal of the season, at 15:31 in the second.

"I wish we could have had the win with it," Taillefer said outside the dressing room, "but 'that's the way it goes.'"

The Mooseheads head out on a three-day road trip in Quebec next weekend to take on the Sherbrooke Phoenix, Blainville-Boisbriand Armada and Drummondville Voltigeurs.

"We've just got to get ready, mentally," Taillefer said.

Huskies' slide continues

Despite a strong start Saturday afternoon on home turf in Halifax, the Saint Mary's Huskies still fell 23-17 to the Bishop's Gaiters in Canadian Interuniversity Sport interlock football action.

The loss was a third straight for Saint Mary's this season.

The Huskies have yet to win a regular-season tilt this year.

In front of just over 900 fans Saturday at Huskies Stadium, Trevor Erdman completed a 20-yard touchdown pass to D'Shawn Miller to give Saint Mary's a 7-0 lead. An eight-yard run and touchdown from Derek Pisani made it 14-0 when the first quarter was done.

But the Gaiters came back with a six-yard rush from Jamall Hyman-Hamilton in the second, and a 43-yard touchdown pass from Mathieu Demers to Trevon Millings in the third, en route to their win.

Vincent Pruneau had 13 carries for 70 yards, while Hamilton added 12 carries for 53 yards and the TD, according to atlanticuniversitysportsport.com.

The Huskies are back in action Saturday, when they travel to Antigonish to take on the X-Men (2 p.m.)

Macho flexes muscles in Roughriders' victory

Macho Harris tied a Saskatchewan record with three interceptions in a game — bringing one back for a touchdown — as the Roughriders beat the visiting Montreal Alouettes 33-21 to earn only their second win of the season.

Jerome Messam rattled off 111 rushing yards and scored one TD for Saskatchewan (2-11), which kept its slim playoff hopes alive. The Alouettes (5-7) failed to keep pace in a tight East Division in front of 30,843 fans at Mosaic Stadium.

Harris picked off Alouettes quarterback Jonathan Crompton on the first drive of the game at the Riders 46-yard line and brought it back 26 yards. On the next play, Kevin Glenn hit Rob Bagg for a 38-yard TD strike. Paul McCallum missed the convert wide right. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Luck is with Colts

Marcus Mariota will be expected to lead the Tennessee Titans past the Indianapolis Colts and Andrew Luck some day.

The Colts' quarterback made sure it wasn't Sunday.

Luck threw two touchdown passes 56 seconds apart in the fourth quarter as he rallied the Indianapolis Colts to their first win this season, beating the Tennessee Titans 35-33.

The Colts (1-2) trailed 27-14 before Luck got going, and Luck improved to 7-0 against Tennessee with another stunning comeback.

He drove the Colts 98 yards before hitting Phillip Dorsett on a 35-yard TD with 6:49 left.

Dwight Lowery became the first defender to intercept Mariota with a 69-yard interception return for a touchdown in the second quarter. He picked off Mariota again to give the ball back to Luck.

Luck found Donte Moncrief for an 11-yard TD for a 28-17 lead just 56 seconds later.

The Titans (1-2) have lost 13 of 14 against their AFC South foe.

Mariota drove them to a TD. Defensive pass interference put the ball at the 1, but rookie full-back Jalston Fowler was stopped for a big loss on the 2-point conversion.

Donaldson walkoff a fitting home finale

MLB

Toronto comes from behind to maintain Jays' streak

The party continued Sunday as Josh Donaldson's walkoff solo homer gave Toronto a 5-4 win over the Tampa Bay Rays in the Blue Jays' regular-season home finale.

Donaldson was doused with Gatorade by delirious teammates as he crossed the plate, to chants of M-V-P, after driving a ball deep to left field for his 41st homer of the season. The third baseman was then doused with popcorn during his post-game interview.

Justin Smoak, who had driven in three runs already, started the Jays' rally with a one-out single in the eighth. Pinch-runner Dalton Pompey stole second and Kevin Pillar doubled him home to tie the game at 4-4.

Ben Revere kept it even in the ninth with a diving catch that saw four Jays converge on a Steven Souza Jr. fly ball.

It was back to business for Toronto (90-65) after a short but wild post-game celebration Saturday of mark securing at least a wild-card berth. The champagne and cigars were put away, at least for a while.

The fans were still partying, however. The Jays got a standing ovation coming off the field after batting practice as well as in the third inning when they came out to salute the crowd as part of Fan Appreciation Weekend.

for Tampa (75-81).

The Jays fought back from 4-1 and had chances to pull even down 4-3 before the eighth.

With one out in the seventh, Revere hit a swerving double deep to left-centre that eluded two Rays outfielders and, one out later, took third on a passed ball. But Jose Bautista hit a hard groundout to third to end the threat.

Donaldson kept the Jays close in the eighth with a heady play, tagging out Mahtook at third as the Rays outfielder struggled to get back on a sharply hit grounder. Opening the inning, Mahtook had singled, moved to second on an error and stole third. A double play ended the Rays' charge.

Smoak doubled home a run in the first inning and hit a two-run homer in the sixth off Brandon Gomes to cut the Tampa lead to 4-3. Smoak's 17th home run of the season upped his RBI total to a career-high 56.

Toronto ended up 53-28 at the Rogers Centre. The Jays finish the regular season on the road with four games in Baltimore and three in Tampa.

The 53 home wins match the Jays' 1992 total and is second only to 1985 (54).

Toronto has been a juggernaut the last two months, going 40-14 since July 28, when it was 50-51. THE CANADIAN PRESS

- Dressing
- 1/2 cup crumbled goat cheese

Directions

1. Season chicken with a pinch of salt and pepper. Grill breasts on the barbecue or a grill pan for about 5 minutes a side until they are cooked through. Set aside.

2. Wash kale and use a sharp knife to cut out the rib of each leaf. Slice the leaves horizontally into ribbons. Drizzle with a bit of olive oil, toss, then massage leaves for a minute or two.

3. Cut chicken into bite-sized pieces. Toss the chicken, berries and pecans in with the kale. Pour a small amount of salad dressing over and toss. Crumble the goat cheese over the salad. Place the extra dressing on the table for anyone who would like a little more on their salad.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS by Sally Brompton

Aries March 21 - April 20
If you are not entirely happy with the way your life is going then do something about it. The lunar eclipse will make it easy for you to get rid of the old and make room for the new.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Common sense will clash with ambition today. Be careful that your words and actions do not create resentment as it could cause problems down the road.

Gemini May 22 - June 21
Cosmic activity may be boosting your confidence but there are still some things that won't come easy. Don't take anything for granted because the moment you do is the moment things will go wrong.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
So many of the difficulties you have been experiencing recently will fade. There will, of course, still be times when you feel as if life is conspiring against you but accept it and deal with it. It's not a crisis.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
You are in a forgiving mood. But let others know you won't be taken advantage of. Don't give the impression that you are going soft!

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You need to accept that certain people and certain situations are too big for you to handle and focus instead on the things that you can have some effect on. Everyone has limits — work within yours.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Good things are happening now but don't take your luck for granted. The lunar eclipse will remind you how easy it is for things to fall apart. Not that they will, but it's a timely warning.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Disputes are likely and you will clash with someone in a position of authority. That's okay. The more you fight for your rights now the less likely it is you will be cheated later.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Check the facts, both in your personal life and at work. You must not take anything at face value over the next few days, not even if it comes from a trusted source.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Good news is coming your way, but is it good news you can trust? The lunar eclipse warns that there could be a catch. You are skilled at spotting tricksters but today it won't be so easy.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may be enthusiastic about what you are working on but don't take on too many tasks. People won't be amused if you fail to deliver what you promised.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
Make sure you keep track of how much money you spend because you could easily get carried away and empty your pockets without much to show for it at the end.
